Indiana Journal of Global Legal Studies. Globalization of Markets and Its Impact on Domestic Institutions. Globalization of Markets and Its Impact on Domestic Institutions. Volume 1 | Issue 1. Indiana Journal of Global Legal Studies. Today, transactions are varied and more complex: contract manufacturing, franchise operations, countertrade, turnkey construction, technology transfers, international strategic alliances, and more. Fourth, technology spreads freely and rapidly between markets and players. Technological leadership does not provide a monopolistic advantage for very long. As global economic linkages intensify, the focus of attention among researchers and public policy makers has shifted from trade relationships among nations to activities of the individual enterprise.
